

globus et locus

GLOCALISM

JOURNAL OF CULTURE, POLITICS AND INNOVATION

CALL FOR PAPERS

“Glocalism”, a peer-reviewed, open-access and cross-disciplinary journal, is currently accepting manuscripts for publication. We welcome studies in any field, with or without comparative approach, that address both practical effects and theoretical import.

All papers should be sent to: davide.cadeddu@unimi.it

Articles can be in any language and length chosen by the author (abstract and keywords in English).

Deadline: September 30, 2021. This issue (2021, 3) is scheduled to appear at end-November 2021.

Website: <https://glocalismjournal.org/>

Direction Committee: Arjun Appadurai (New York University); Daniele Archibugi (Birkbeck, University of London); Seyla Benhabib (Yale University); Sabino Cassese (Scuola Normale Superiore); Manuel Castells (Universitat Oberta de Catalunya); Fred Dallmayr (University of Notre Dame); Anthony Giddens (London School of Economics and Political Science); Sheila Jasanoff (Harvard University); Hans Köchler (University of Innsbruck); Alberto Martinelli (Università degli Studi di Milano); Anthony McGrew (La Trobe University, Melbourne); Alberto Quadrio Curzio (Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore); Roland Robertson (University of Pittsburgh and University of Aberdeen); Saskia Sassen (Columbia University); Amartya Sen (Harvard University); Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak (Columbia University); Alain Touraine (École des Hautes Études en Sciences Sociales); Salvatore Veca (Istituto Universitario di Studi Superiori).

the topic of this issue

CITIES AND MIGRATION IN THE NEW POST-PANDEMIC NORMAL

*edited by M. Savino, G. Terranova, M. Veltri
(Jean Monnet European Center of Excellence IntoME, University of Tuscia)*

Public space is the background of our daily life and the framework of our professional research. The pandemic has precipitated the progressive disappearance of communities from the collective spaces of the city and contemporary society, which, in turn, is continuously changing in terms of both form and needs. This situation prompted us to open a scientific debate on the relationship between migration and urbanization in the new post-pandemic normal. A question regarding these emerging scenarios is whether and how urban areas and small municipalities are changing due to the impact of migrants' settlement. How can we rethink public spaces in the digital era? How can we avoid forms of marginalization and the ghettoization of migrants?

This issue of Glocalism may include the following research outline: (i) a state-of-the-art review of the current debate on the local integration of migrants in each discipline, with specific regard to the impact of migrants' settlement in urban areas and in smaller municipalities; (ii) an assessment as to whether and how the pandemic will change urbanisation processes and the way in which the city is experienced (both in developed and developing countries); (iii) an attempt to identify possible solutions in order to make cities and mobility more sustainable (as suggested by the Sustainable Development Goals) in the post-pandemic phase.

These problems may be addressed by jurists, sociologists, geographers and urbanists (departing from an interdisciplinary and comparative perspective) by identifying and examining the requests for the new necessities of living in the public space whilst considering the fact that cultural hybridization is in a state of constant change. The purpose of this issue is to inspire new research with the intent of getting a sense of what the new post-pandemic normal looks like in an interconnected global society.